

DEDICATE NEW WLS TRANSMITTER

Powerful New Station Used First Time Last Saturday

The new 50,000 watt WLS radio transmitter located on Keane Avenue about 2 1/2 miles northeast of Mokena was used for the first time last Saturday at the Barn Dance. On Monday noon the new transmitter and station was officially dedicated by the WLS officials.

Eleven trees were planted in the lot surrounding the transmitter site. A tree planting ceremony was conducted and Bill O'Connor sang a very appropriate song, "Trees." Those heard on the dedication program were: Arthur Page, Burridge Butler, Publisher of Prairie Farmer; Dr. John W. Holland, WLS Radio Pastor; Wm. Kline, Announcer and others.

The Arkansas Woodchopper sang a number, and one of the outstanding features was the appearance of Betty Jane Rowe, daughter of Tom Lowell Rowe, chief engineer at the new transmitter station. Betty sang, "Little Girl in the Bonnet of Blue", and was accompanied on the organ by her mother.

Mr. Butler paid a very flattering compliment to Miss Betty and wound up by giving her a very resounding kiss on the cheek which was heard very plainly over the radio. Miss Betty had the honor of dedicating the new transmitter and when called on, for remarks, stated very briefly, "I am very happy that Mr. Butler has chosen me to dedicate this station." Tom Rowe, chief engineer, who had charge of the installation of the new transmitter was called on, and very briefly stated that the new outfit was RCA all the way.

A very interesting description was given of the new station. In the building which houses the transmitter apparatus, is an observation room with plate glass panels thru which the workings of the station can be seen.

A corner stone was also laid. A copper box in which copies of recent issues of the Prairie Farmer were placed as well as other material, was sealed in an opening left in the wall of the transmitter station as the corner stone. Dr. Holland, former pastor of the New Lenox and Tinley Park M. E. churches, now radio pastor of WLS made brief remarks following which Wm. O'Connor closed the program with the song, "Blest Be The Tie That Binds."

The new transmitter is of the very latest and most modern type of design. The transmitter tower is 587 feet in height and at night the red lights on this tower can be seen for many miles around. The transmitter sight is located on the former Wm. Lauffer farm on Route 45, just within Will County.

Rep. Sam Perry Received 88,635 Votes

In spite of the tremendous Republican landslide of votes that overwhelmed all Democratic candidates in Will and Du Page counties, as well as all Democratic state candidates, one lone Democrat came thru to victory in the race for the General Assembly.

That Democrat was Joseph Sam Perry, whose total vote in the two counties was 88,635. Warren Wood followed him with a total of 84,238, and Mrs. Lottie Holman O'Neil came in with 79,247.

While it was impossible for Perry to lose in the race, observers in both political camps lifted their eyebrows in amazement when the final canvass showed such a tremendous independent vote for him.

TREASURY EMPTY IN WILL COUNTY; WORKERS UNPAID

In all its existence of over 80 years, Will County has never been flat broke far as the general county fund was concerned, but the Board of Supervisors apparently has been looking the other way, if at all, and as a result, 100 county employees—judges, clerks, stenographers, sheriff and deputies—met a startling and totally unexpected answer when they asked for their semi-monthly pay checks Tuesday.

"I am sorry," said Treasurer Conrad Wirth, "but there is no money." This answer and a subsequent hurried investigation revealed that Will County is flat broke and in debt, and unless the board can pull a rabbit out of a hat, there is small chance that the employees will be paid any salary before next June.

An emergency session of the board has been called for next Tuesday.

The shocked and surprised county officials could offer little explanation for the manner in which their government could go broke without any one knowing of it.

"Well," said Wirth, "we have been showing a deficit for sometime. But the treasurer's committee of the Board of Supervisors didn't show up until this morning and all of a sudden we found there wasn't any more money."

James Harden of Wilmington Township, president of the Board, said he didn't know where a financial statement could be found.

"All I know," he said, "is that there is just no money there."

The $20,000 expected January 1, from liquor licenses will be needed for back bills, and tax collections will not be available until June.

James Bell, the incoming new County Treasurer, faces a big problem how to operate with an empty treasury.

Monday morning the east bound Rock Island Rocket Streamliner train was stopped at New Lenox when a bearing in one of the wheels of the coaches broke causing the wheel to lock and failing to turn as a result the wheel dragged on the rails from Joliet to New Lenox. The friction caused the wheel to turn white with heat and was flattened where it had dragged on the rail.

Some one at the "J" tower in Joliet had noticed the wheel dragging and called the operator at New Lenox to stop the train. The car was set off for repairs at New Lenox.

NO FEDERAL FUNDS FOR NEW VILLAGE HALL

Mayor Geo. Sangmeister of Frankfort, has been checking up why nothing further has been heard from the government regarding the PWA grant sought for the new Frankfort village hall. He received a letter from Harold Ickes, in Washington, in which he stated that at present all non-federal projects funds allocated for 1938 had been exhausted and no recommendation could be made for a grant for the Frankfort project this year although the project was being given active consideration.

Mayor Sangmeister then took the matter up with United States Senator Hamilton Lewis of Illinois who advised him that he would check up and find out whether some community had been given a grant which they were not using and in such event such grant would be switched over to Frankfort project. Senator Lewis however advised Mayor Sangmeister that it would be best to wait before taking any other action. It is said that it might be possible that project grants will be made in 1939. In the meantime Mayor Sangmeister laid the matter before the village board of Frankfort and they have agreed to let the matter rest for the present until other developments take place.

"Well, well," said Herrick. "And who ever heard of two guests abusing their host at table until he's carried away and then getting down to his brandy and having a rubber of bridge? You know it's blasphemous. I don't believe the Borgias ever did that. And I'll lay lil Percy's got ear-ache. Three swine to one pearl!"

I forgot what answer I made, but I know I sent Winter to bed and, after two or three minutes, went up to my room. But I did not intend to sleep; for the "pearl" was out of my sight.

I had seen her into her suite 20 minutes before. I trusted to see her come out in a little less than eight hours. But I had no faith in Elsa, and—Virgil had his back to the wall. Had there been but one door to her suite, I would have slept across it. But there were four doors to her suite, and one was outside. I could not so much as watch them: Argus himself could have watched but one at a time.

I took off my coat and lighted a cigarette . . .

As I threw the match out of the window, somebody knocked at my door.

I was at the oak in a flash, to find Winter standing without, with a key in his hand.

"I forgot to tell you, sir," he entered and shut the door. "You gave me this key and told me to lock up the Rolls. Her doors, I mean. But I haven't been able to, because this isn't the key."

"Isn't the key?" I said, frowning, and with that I took it out of his hand.

"It isn't, indeed, sir. I tried it again and again."

"But . . ."

And there I stopped dead—with my eyes on the key I was holding between my finger and thumb. Winter was right. This was not the key of the Rolls. Although she did not know it, Elizabeth Virgil had the key of the Rolls. I had handed it to her on Friday, with the rest of her things. It was now, perhaps, under her pillow. But this was her master key . . . that fitted all five of her locks.

CHAPTER IX

Whilst I changed, I gave Winter his orders. These were, in short, to pass the night on the landing, watching the door which gave to Elizabeth's suite.

"If anyone tries to enter, put your torch on his face and hold him up. The door may be opened for him; but don't like Elsa's face, and he's not to go in. When you've got him, lift up your voice and shout my name, and I'll be with you before you know where you are. I shall be in the staircase-turret, closely watching the other door of her ladyship's rooms."

"And if you want me, sir?" said Winter.

"I'll call her ladyship. She'll let me through her suite and on to the stair. I don't think anything will happen, and, but for Elsa, I'd tell you to go to bed. But it's thanks to me that she is inside that suite, so it's up to me to see that she does no harm."

And there I remembered Elgar, the man for whom Virgil had called when we had escaped from the tower. I had learned from Elizabeth that he was Virgil's chauffeur and was as much trusted by his master as he was distrusted by everyone else at Brief.

But when I mentioned his name—"He's away just now," said Winter, "with Mr. Virgil's car. There's a knock in the engine or something they can't get right."

"So much the better," said I, and spoke as I thought.

And that, I think, shows how ill equipped I was to deal with a man of Virgil's capacity, for I should at once have suspected the absence of his chauffeur and car. But I am ashamed to say that it did not occur to me that, if there is work of a certain kind to be done, the lugger will take an offing, instead of staying in port. Be that as it may, I read the danger-signal as being a piece of good news: then I took up my pistol and torch, and we left the tower.

To post Winter took but a moment; and then I was treading the steps down which I had knocked the servant six days before. My shoes were rubber-soled, and I made no sound, but, as I have said before, the well of the staircase was lit, and the first floor, to which I was going, was very much better illuminated than was the landing above. Still, there were shadows enough about, and I carefully kept to them.

As luck would have it, I knew the whole of my way. I was not going down to the hall: I was bound for the picture-gallery, where we had gathered that evening, before dinner was served. This lay upon the first floor—a fine, long room, and its range of windows was broken into three bays by two of the staircase-turrets with which the castle was served. And the first of these, I knew, was Elizabeth's own—I had seen her come out of its door at a quarter past eight.

Using the greatest caution, I left the magnificent staircase and stole to the gallery's doors. Happily, these were open, but here the darkness was thick, so I put to the doors behind me and drew my torch. And there my luck went out, for the torch I found to be useless. It was dead.

Now I could, of course, have gone back: but, since Winter needed his torch, it meant going back or sending him back to my room: so I made up my mind to go on, because, though I should have liked it, I could tread upon Virgil's toes without seeing his face.

The gallery seemed broader than I had thought, but at length I was touching the curtains, which had been drawn. At once I turned to the left, for now I had found the windows, I had to do no more than follow their line along. And because I had my bearings, perhaps I moved with less care than I should have shown. In any event, I had almost come to the door, when I long, for the turret adjoined the castle, yet was complete in itself. An electric light was burning where passage and stairway met, thus lighting the steps up and down as well as the passage itself.

I leaned against the wall and heaved a sigh of relief. Harp or no harp, I had gained the position I sought, and Winter and I between us commanded Elizabeth's suite. If . . .

And there I heard a girl laugh . . . a stifled, mischievous laugh . . . to tell me she knew I was there.

It was Elsa, of course. I knew that. She must have heard the harp fall and have left Elizabeth's suite to see what the matter might be. And then she had seen the door open and, probably, me come in.

There was only one thing to be done.

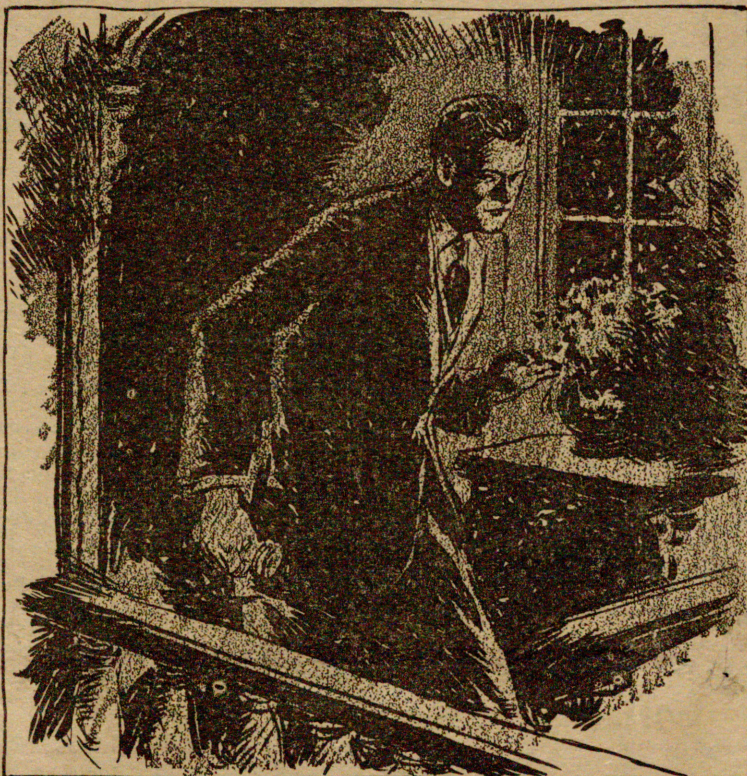

"Is that you, Elsa?" I said, and stepped to the curling stair.

Looking up, I saw her standing, point-device as ever, back to the wall.

Then somebody standing behind me laid me out.

The first thing that I remember was Percy Virgil's voice.

As I lifted my head, he spoke,

And at Last I Knew I Was Saved.

brushed against something unwieldy—and knocked it down.

Now when a man who is trying not to be heard knocks over a chair or a table, it shortens his life. But when he knocks over such a thing as a harp . . .

Not only was the crash appalling, but every string of the instrument sounded its liquid note. Indeed, as I stood there, trembling, I thought that the dulcet announcement would never die, and when at last it did, I should have been glad to die with it, because in all my life I never felt so much abashed. Discovery was, of course, inevitable. I had not only waked the household: I had declared where I was: for the harp, like that of the giant in Jack and the Beanstalk, had lifted up an unmistakable voice.

I wiped the sweat from my face and waited for the sound of men running and voices raised. Virgil, no doubt, would come thrusting to rub my nose in the desperate mess I had made. I began to try to prepare some halting explanation which was not beneath contempt . . .

I do not know how long I stood still, but as the moments went by, yet nobody came, I began to dare to believe that I was to be spared. The silence which I had shattered was absolute as ever: no faintest indication of movement came to my ears. And at last I knew I was saved. For some extraordinary reason, no one was coming to answer the call of the harp.

Expecting to be discovered and put to shame, I had, of course, relinquished my delicate enterprise: but now there was plainly no reason why I should withdraw, provided that on my way back, when my watch was done, I set up the harp again by the light of the dawn. So I ventured to hold on my course.

Before I had covered six feet, I touched the door of the turret to which I was trying to come . . .

Now I had expected the staircase to be in darkness: but the moment I opened the door, I knew that a light was burning beyond the oak. For a moment I found this strange. Then I remembered that I had left lights burning on the staircase within the tower and decided that the practice was natural where dangerous steps were serving a private room.

I took the key from the lock, stepped across the threshold and closed the door.

I was now in a little, stone passage which ran through the castle wall and gave directly on to the turret-stair: the wall being four feet thick, the passage was four feet and a gag was clapped into my mouth—a pad of sweet-smelling silk, which I afterwards found was one of my lady's chemises, fresh from some drawer. When I tried to sit up, I found that my hands were not free. My wrists were strapped tight together, behind my back.

I was still too dazed to make any useful effort, so I laid my head back on the stone and closed my eyes, determined to stay where I was till my strength and my senses came back, for though I could not think straight, I knew that I needed them both as never before. For a moment I seemed to be swaying, although I was lying still . . . Then somebody made me sit up and pushed my head forward and down . . . Then water was poured on my head and down the back of my neck . . .

It was that that cleared my brain, and though my head was aching, from that time on I was healthy in body and mind.

I lifted my head and looked round.

I was sitting in the passage, just clear of the turret-stair. Percy Virgil was sitting on the stair, a step or two up. And a man who I knew must be Elgar was standing in the

Carp Is Badge of Audacity for the Boys in Japan; Streamers Old Custom

Japanese youths recently celebrated the Boys' festival, under the aegis of carp, their badge of audacity. The carp is seen as the embodiment of manly virtues, its boldness seen when it leaps a waterfall. Its unflinching resignation in the face of death is observed when it is laid on the carving board and touched with the flat of the knife—it stops wriggling.

In every house where there is a boy, the parents attach at the end of a long pole in the garden, or to the roof of the house, a balloonlike carp made of cotton or silk, and black, yellow or red in color, which the wind fills out, making it swim in the air, according to an authority.

One carp is hoisted for each son: a large one, perhaps 15 feet or more in length, for the eldest; others smaller, and quite a tiny one if there is a baby boy in the family.

This custom of flying carp streamers began more than 250 years ago as an expression of rivalry on the part of the common folk against the armed classes who used to display outside their dwellings war streamers, lances, long-passage beside me, pitcher in hand. Percy Virgil picked up my pistol, looked at the safety-catch, weighed the thing on his palm and slipped it into his coat. Then he glanced at his wrist-watch and fingered his chin.

"You are very convenient, Mr. Exon. I should have got you later, but probably only after an ugly scene. And I do so dislike being crossed . . . But now you've avoided all that, and, what is more, you have made my path very smooth. You see, my cousin is going. The Lady Elizabeth Virgil is leaving the castle tonight. That was always understood, not by you, or that silver-tongued fairy, the Duchess of Whelp. But it was understood by me—as soon as I heard that my cousin was coming back. You see, I don't want her here. I really made that plain about ten days ago. But some people won't take a hint . . . Well, now she is going for good. She will never come back."

The man stopped there and leaned forward, with glittering eyes.

"My luck came in, Mr. Exon, when you knocked over that harp . . . We were going, Mr. Exon. Elsa had received her instructions and Elgar was on this stair. And then you knocked over the harp . . . And so I held everything up and waited for you."

"Now what will they find tomorrow? Not one, but both of you gone . . . Abduction? Well, hardly. They don't abduct people like you. What about an illicit elopement? A passionate flight? Oh, that's absurd . . . Wait a minute. Consider that beautiful scene in the belvedere? This evening . . . at sunset, Mr. Exon. Yes, you were watched—by a most reliable man. And then the key to her bedroom . . . that a lady gave to her swain? And then the dressing-case . . . which Elsa is packing now? Elsa—there's a good girl. She will speak to her own reactions—with tears running down her cheeks: how she and you fought for her darling and how her entreaties were foiled by the way of a man with a maid. Aunt Sally may put up a show, but she won't be able to face these basic facts. And I hardly think she'll lay them before the police. I mean, they might miss the idyll and get the blurb . . ."

He got to his feet and yawned.

"Go and get her ladyship, Elgar; and tell Monna Lisa I'm not going to wait all night. If she can't pack a dressing-case—"

"It is ready," said Elsa's voice, as Elgar went up the stair.

"You see, Mr. Exon," said Virgil, "the way to win in this world is to go all lengths. It's simpler, swifter and safer—every time. Think what I should have been spared if I had taken that course ten days ago. But there . . . One lives and learns. Take my two, er, assistants, for instance." He threw a glance up the stair. "I can count upon Elsa. She's wanted in Bristol for forgery—a very bad case. But on Elgar I have no hold: so, though he does not know it, he hasn't got long to live. I think he will be run over—I'm not quite sure. But here they come."

He picked up a length of cord and then stepped over my legs and out of the way. The next moment Elgar appeared, with Elizabeth over his shoulder, as though she were wounded and senseless and he was bringing her in.

"Put her ladyship down," said Virgil, making a knot in his cord.

Elgar unshouldered his burden and set it down on the steps.

My eyes met those of my lady, and order came back to my soul.

"Canst thou not minister to a mind diseased?"

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:14; Matthew 5:27, 28; Mark 10:2-16.
GOLDEN TEXT—Keep thyself pure.—I Timothy 5:22.

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education; used by permission.

The importance of the home as the divinely appointed center of all human life has always made it a special target of Satan. That onslaught of the power of hell is apparently redoubled in our day. Books, plays, movies, magazines, all contribute their filthy efforts to break down all sense of moral responsibility. Sex is magnified, and not in any useful or normal sense, but rather for the stimulating of unholy desires and purposes, the breaking down of Christian standards of living and the ultimate prostitution of the most sacred of all human relationships to a level of which animals might well be ashamed.

The lesson of today should be taught with care and tact, but also with a holy boldness and a plainness that will make it effective for God and for our homes. We begin with a word which is little spoken, while far too often the sin for which it stands is practiced and tolerated.

I. Adultery—a Grievous Sin (Exod. 20:14; Matt. 5:27, 28).

First, let us note that any violation of the divine plan for the marriage of one man and one woman, in loving communion for the founding and maintenance of the home, is a direct violation of the law of God. It is also a violation of the law of man. It brings serious results in the destruction of the home, and in the ruin of individual life—physical, moral, and spiritual.

The words of Jesus broaden the interpretation of the commandment to cover all sexual impurity in thought, word, or deed. While we recognize that the outward act of immorality carries with it consequences both in the life of the individual and those with and against whom he sins, which do not follow upon the thought of evil without the act, yet it is true that essentially he is guilty who had it in his heart to do the wicked thing even though a sense of prudence or circumstances hindered its execution. We need clean hearts and minds if there are to be clean lives.

II. Marriage—a Divine Institution (Mark 10:6-8).

As the proper background for a discussion of divorce our Lord makes clear that marriage was ordained by God, and that it involves a holy union of two individuals which makes them one. All those who look forward to marriage should realize that it is not a casual thing, or a merely temporary legal contract. It is a union for life—be it for better or worse, in sickness or health, in prosperity or adversity. All who are married should therefore highly regard their sacred vows.

III. Divorce Limited and Remarriage Forbidden (Mark 10:2-4, 10-12).

This passage, and other scriptures, teach that divorce is not permitted except on the ground of adultery (Matt. 5:32), and that any remarriage involves the parties in the guilt of adultery. Aware as we are of the laxness of some branches of the church in such matters, and the almost entire lack of standards in the world, we cannot but present the plain teachings of our Lord and urge every reader to follow the commandment of God's Word.

There can be no question that divorce is a major evil in our day. The writer has been astonished to find one family after another in his own respectable neighborhood where the children bear one name and their mothers another, or there are two "sets" of children in one family with different surnames because of divorce and remarriage. In some cases he knows of the fathers of children coming to see their offspring at the home of the second husband. What utter confusion such situations must create in the minds and hearts of the boys and girls!

IV. Children—the Gift of God to the Home (Mark 10:13-16).

How relieved we are to leave the consideration of such sordid, even though vitally important, matters as moral impurity and divorce, and turn to the beautiful picture of Christ blessing the little children. It would appear that Jesus desired to turn the thought of His hearers from the negative "thou shalt not" to the positive solution of the home problem.

Children make the home. They are God's benediction upon the marriage of man and woman. Sad and disillusioned will be the men and women who make themselves childless, hoping thus for more comfort and pleasure. The road to happiness does not go that way. The soft and tender baby hand has led many a couple to full happiness, and the joy of watching our children grow into manhood and womanhood cannot be evaluated in the mint of gold or earthly pleasures.

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance.

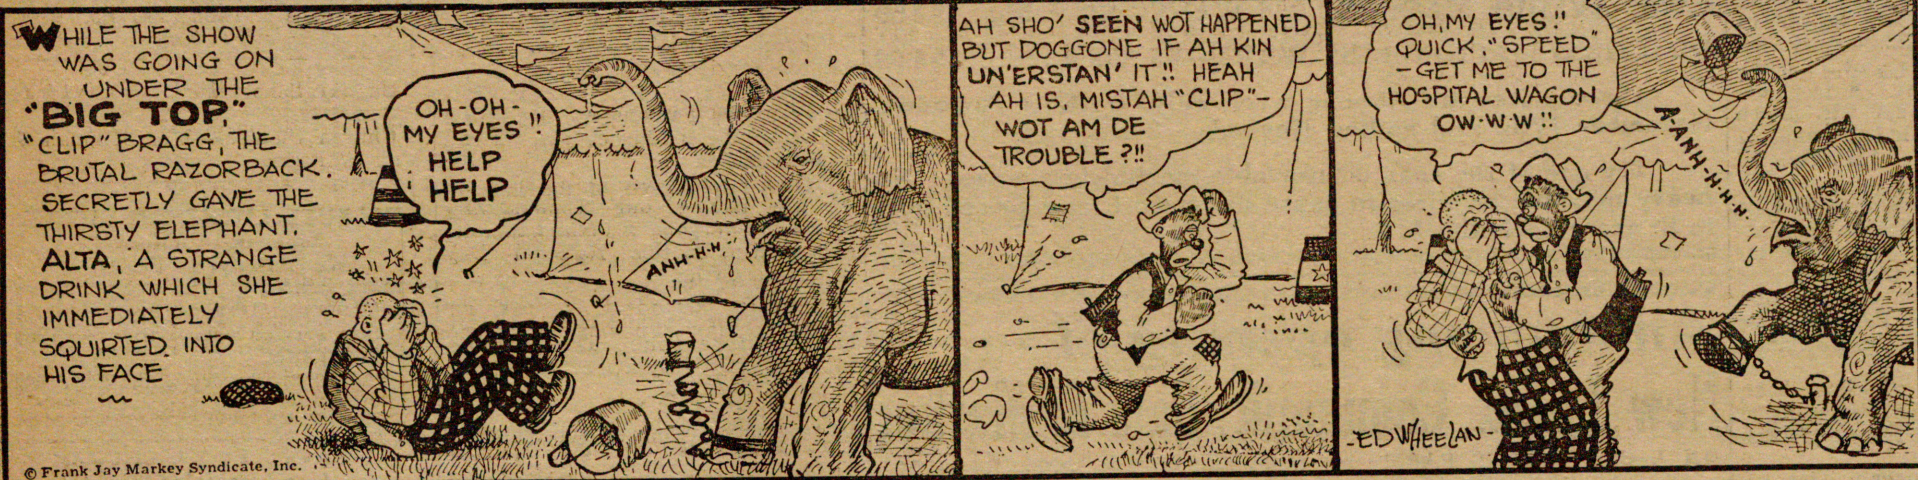

The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

Sound Thinking

"The greatest need in the world today is for men and women who can think straight," said former President Abbott Lawrence Lowell of Harvard university some time ago. But what constitutes sound thinking? Too many times we permit "wishful thinking," to be mistaken for "sound thinking," and often we permit emotions, prejudices, and even hatreds to color our thinking for us.—J. H. Jackson.

The biggest Armistice Day observance since the war was had by American Legion Auxiliary members throughout the country. Auxiliary Units in more than 9,000 cities and towns co-operated with their Legion Posts in celebrating the anniversary of victory and peace.

Armistice Day this year was the twentieth anniversary of the signing of the Armistice which ended the World War. Recent events have aroused wide public appreciation of the value of the peace and security that day brought to our country, and have stimulated a patriotic determination to maintain America's peace and freedom. For the first time this year, Armistice Day was a national legal holiday by act of Congress.

Tinley Park Unit entertained their Legion Post on Armistice night which also fell on their meeting night. A hearty welcome was handed them from the Auxiliary and Commander Frank Baldwin responded for the boys. After the close of the meeting, cards and bunco was played, every Legionnaire receiving a gift. A feature of the evening was the cake trimmed with two American flags crossed, three rose clusters tinted red, white and blue, also the words "Armistice Day, Tinley Park Post 615." The Commander cut the cake for the boys. Hot roast beef sandwiches, pickles and coffee was served. The evening's fun ended in singing of war songs and much enjoyed by all. Americanism chairman Erna Wallin was assisted in serving by Ruth Cushman, Ruth Frietag.

Armistice Day was a big day for Unit 615 in another way. They became 100 percent Sooners in membership.

Our next business meeting will be at Frances Rowden's home, Friday, November 25th, 1938. This will be the last meeting before our bunco and card party, December 1st. So please bring prizes and gifts for the basket to this meeting if possible.

The Juniors will meet at Ruth Cushman's home Saturday, Nov. 26, and will sew on carpet rags. Bring your Christmas cards and stamps. The Junior Advisor, Myrtle Wolf states silk hose and matches needed. Blanch Carr, Pub. Chr., Unit 615.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES
"Mortals and Immortals" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, November 13.

The Golden Text was, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new" (II Cor. 5:17).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is" (I John 3:2).
The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Mortals are not like immortals; created in God's own image; but infinite Spirit being all, mortal consciousness will at last yield to the scientific fact and disappear, and the real sense of being, perfect and forever intact, will appear" (P. 293:11).

Wrestling Thanksgiving Nite, Nov. 24th

Promotor Walter Shaughnessy is attempting to line-up an all-star wrestling card for his Thanksgiving show in the Chamber of Commerce building. No one but the best talent is being interviewed for the show of the season. Negotiations are now under way with Jim McMillen, Ignacio Martinez, Pete Schu, Gus Sonnenberg, Ruffy Silverstein, Jack Claybourn and all of the mat stars within reach.

Altho the matches have not been made and the stars have not all signed Shaughnessy is certain that he will be able to bring enough top notchers in to make the Holiday show an outstanding one.

One thing is certain and that is that every bout will be of main bout material. Silverstein has already been signed, that in itself is an attraction, his opponent will most likely be Stanley Pinto or Hans Schnabel or Frederick Von Schact. Pete Schu is also signed.

Jack Claybourn, the black panther who is in Detroit, and Gus Sonnenberg who is also in Detroit is being contacted and an acceptance or refusal is expected momentarily.

Shaughnessy is trying to match Jim McMillen with Fredreich von Schact if it can be arranged. This match if completed will be the match of the winter season. There is plenty of hard feelings between these boys.

The Thanksgiving show will have two, one hour matches and two 45 minute matches. Starting at 8:30 p. m., the first 100 general admission tickets will sell at 28c with the rest going at 44c, reserved seats will be 75c. The 28c seats will have to be limited due to the exorbitant price that will have to be guaranteed for this all star show.

Bugle Calls

By Zeb Potter

In Springfield the Democratic bosses, the men that deal out the patronage and the jobs, are upset. Will County turned in a heavier vote for Richard Lyons than their own candidate.

The jobholders on state payrolls living in and around Joliet are on the "griddle." It is their job to turn out a hundred percent vote in their respective precincts for the party. When they fall down and don't deliver the votes, they soon hear about it from Springfield.

That's why you see continual replacements in the state line up. On the other hand the voter not dependent on a public job but loyal to the party, resents the intrusion of outsiders in the local political picture. People each year are getting more independent in their voting. They vote the man quite often and not the party.

Roosevelt's big mistake was made when he went to the people of Georgia and Maryland and told them for whom to vote for senator. Did they do it? No.

Nazis expel Jews from colleges and other headlines greet you every day from the front page of the daily newspapers. What is back of all this fury of Hitler and his crowd against the Jews, the Catholics and the Lutherans of Germany? Simply this — living conditions under Nazi rule in Germany today are becoming increasingly difficult. Life is hard on the German people. Food is high. To take the mind of the German people off their true and actual condition, Hitler, Dr. Goebbels, and Goering kick the Jews around. In the old days the Romans fed the Christians to the lions in the circus. History repeats itself. Believe it or not.

The movie business in California is experiencing a slump. It should. It has paid too much money to good looking young men and girls without called them movie stars. Too little attention has been paid to the under dogs in that business, the technicians and others who make the wheels go around.

To arouse public attention and interest in current movies a big prize contest is on. To my mind that is evidence of weakness of the producers. Their work should be sufficiently attractive so that to bait the public is unnecessary.

The man who under estimates the intelligence of the American people is only deluding himself. Give the people some moving pictures with thought and the managers will not have to worry about the box office returns. A picture like Victor Hugo's Les Miserables can still fill a house no matter how many times it returns to town. Why? Because it depicts a dramatic social theme, the fact that paroled convicts are still hounded by the police despite the fact that they have served their time and have paid their debt to society.

That's all this week. —Zeb Potter

SCHOOL NEWS

PRIMARY ROOM

Last week the children enjoyed hearing a special program over the radio. It was a very interesting story and the children were asked to sing along with the program. They all enjoyed it very much. We are planning to listen every Thursday at the same time.

INTERMEDIATE ROOM

The Intermediate Room is attractively decorated for the month of November by work by the pupils. The pupils are enjoying the new books bought by the PTA very much. During a meeting held by the newly organized Junior Red Cross the following officers were elected:

Chairman, Shirley Marti, Vice chairman, Eldamae Schudt, Secretary, Violet Hurley, Treasurer, Lois Mancke.

The sixth grade enjoyed having a question bee during their geography period Monday, Thursday we listened to an interesting program over the radio on "The Making of Furniture". The pupils of the Intermediate room are having speed drills in tables every day. Winners have their names written in colored chalk in the Good Work corner. The fifth and sixth grades are making posters illustrating good lunches for health work, Thursday, November 10 a short program was given during the English Hour on Armistice Day.

JUNIOR HIGH

The Junior Red Cross group in the Junior High room elected the following officers last Tuesday: Chairman, Hobart Meyers, Vice Chairman, Melvin Krapp, Secretary Jean Shevlin, Treasurer, Marlys Krapp.

The Junior high room has charge of the assembly next Friday afternoon. All parents and friends are cordially invited.

HIGH SCHOOL

On election day the High school pupils were furnished with sample ballots and conducted an election in the room. The results of the election showed that the Republicans won the majority of offices. The pupils enjoyed voting and feel that it helped them to get an idea of the method of voting which they need to know as future voters.

Two new books have been added to the high school library. They are proving to be very popular. "Sue Barton" appeals more to the girls and "China Quest" to the boys, but anyone would enjoy reading either or both of them. These books were given to the library by the PTA.

SPORTS

The first basketball game of the season will be played this Friday night, Nov. 18 with Manhattan. The grade school game will start at 7:30 p.m. This will be your first chance to see this year's team, so come on and show them you are backing them.

Danville Adopts Plan to Create Own Prosperity

Unique Project To Provide More Payrolls, Jobs

Twenty-five new factories for Danville in five years! That is the program mapped out under the Danville Plan through which this city expects to find her own way back to prosperity.

What is this Danville Plan? In brief, it's a brand new idea for industrial development for small corporations. It was worked out by Danville men vitally interested in the future prosperity and general welfare of their community. More factories and more payrolls is the basic idea, but the Plan goes much further than that. When fully developed every organization in the city will have the opportunity to cooperate in making Danville a busier, greater and happier community in which to live.

First Factory Already Established
Already the Plan is bearing fruit. First of the proposed 25 new factory units has been completed on Bahls St., two blocks north of E. Fairchild St., and is being occupied this week by the Grogan Photo Service Company, who have moved to Danville from Chicago. The Grogan Company manufactures photographic prints of high speed reproduction of actual photographs on cards, tickets and mailing pieces and enjoys national distribution. It holds patents on the machine processes used in making these prints and has an excellent sales and manufacturing organization.

Now let's go back to the Danville Plan itself and find out why it was developed, just what it is, how it works, and what it is expected to accomplish.

More Jobs for Unemployed

Some months ago the civic minded citizens began a systematic study of Danville's needs. In the group were business men, manufacturers, financiers, property owners, newspaper representatives, leading citizens and others. They found one need outstanding. This was the need for more payrolls. With more payrolls, it was pointed out, other needs, such as jobs for unemployed, better retail business, more work for crafts men, an outlet for money held by lending institutions, general civic development, etc., could be met almost automatically. The big problem then, was to obtain more payrolls. How could this be done?

In studying this problem the group learned that 75 per cent of the smaller industries have found it to their advantage to be located in smaller communities provided suitable buildings are available. What these industries wanted was modern standardized buildings so constructed and located as to meet their particular present needs and provide for possible future expansion. But financing a factory building and site is an obstacle that blocks much industrial development. And here was another problem.

Form Development Corporation

If Danville wanted more payrolls, it seemed to this group of citizens, the logical step was to devise some plan whereby small industries could be assisted in financing factory buildings. They set out to find an answer to this problem also. The result was the origination of the Danville Plan and organization of the Danville Development Corporation to carry it out.

In reality this corporation was formed to create business in Danville, and it is believed to be the first of its kind in history. The officers and owners are Danville business men, manufacturers, bankers, property owners and other citizens whose faith in their community has prompted them to invest in its future. The corporation contemplates issuing interest bearing bonds to be secured by mortgages on standardized industrial buildings.

Here is what the Danville Development Corporation proposes to do to encourage smaller industrial companies to locate in Danville:

The corporation will build standardized factory housing units of 5,000 square feet of floor space of approximately 100 feet long by 50 feet wide, in addition to wash room, boiler room and toilet facilities. These buildings are to be constructed of brick, cement, steel and glass.

Each factory is to be laid out on a lot or site four times the size of the building. This will allow for and protect future development. At the same time this plan does not interfere with city zoning ordinances, as locations will be obtained in different sections of Danville, and in suburbs of the city, in order to comply with zoning regulations.

Danville Development Corporation also proposes to finance these standardized factory buildings, and to finance them over a 10-year period. It is proposed to build five factories each year for five years, making a total of 25 factories. Under the financing plan proposed, initial building costs can be prorated and spread over a period of 10 years at a minimum of interest charges, making it possible for small industries to use and acquire these industrial properties on contract, or just like paying rent. No initial investment is required and the cost in most cases, it was said, would be less per month than many small industries are now paying out in rent in metropolitan centers. This means that they will not have to impair their working capital and will be able to install more efficient equipment to enable them to meet production demands.

Under the proposed plan expansion of the original factories also would be standardized. The unit, as already explained, would be about 50 feet wide by 100 feet long, providing 5,000 square feet of space to be utilized to meet particular needs of the company. This unit would be built at one corner of the factory site, Unit No. 2 would be built directly in rear of Unit 1 and of the same size. Units 3 and 4 would be built parallel and be duplicates of the first two units, with a connecting wing at the front to be used as the administration unit. This would provide a U-shaped building with a large court in the center. A central heating plant large enough to provide for all expansion without change will be provided for the first unit. And, it was pointed out, if still further expansion is desired, it will be possible to go up in the air on three or four units.

Some of the advantages in following this plan were cited as follows:

If the plant is never expanded beyond Unit 1 and 2, there will be ample space for parking and landscaping.

If the plant is expanded to the full four units or more, it will not be necessary to pay exorbitant prices for additional ground.

The entire future of the plant is settled when the first unit is occupied. Even though all four units are eventually constructed the center court still provides space for parking and landscaping.

Still another advantage in the plan is the standardization of the buildings. This means that in the event any company occupying a factory unit should be compelled to give it up for any reason, the building remains ideal for the use of some other small industry and does not become a "white elephant" in the community. Rearranging the interior to fit the needs of a new tenant would be comparatively simple and inexpensive. This means protection for the Danville corporation building the factories.

Danville Development Corporation also proposes to conduct a training school for financial and budget control, not only for industrial organizations, but for retailers. Courses in sales engineering will be developed to teach and train coming young executives in the value of sound business management. Value of monthly budget operations and profit and loss statements in obtaining bank credit would be especially stressed.

Directors of Danville Development Corporation are highly enthusiastic over this new idea. They feel that it is the answer to the economic problems facing small cities today. Even though economic problems seem unsolvable from a national scale, they point out, is it the solution to the problems facing Danville.

Danville is ideally located near the center of population of the United States, and the directors are confident many smaller industrial corporations could be attracted here.

"In looking backward," one of them said, "Danville has made progress in spite of adverse economic conditions. In looking forward, much prosperity can be created for Danville through this idea. An intensified national campaign could and would publicize the idea, and such a campaign is now being planned and developed."

Financing factory buildings and developing more payrolls for Danville is only the first of five phases of the Danville Plan as now contemplated. But before going into the other four phases, a brief summary of what the first phase can mean to the community might be helpful.

First phase of the plan is designed to provide the city with 25 new factories employing a total of 200 to 400 workers. These units could reasonably be expected to grow in volume as to payroll and number of employees. This in turn would create a demand for more homes, which would mean more work for the building trades and more business for material dealers, in addition to the work and business provided by the construction of new factories themselves. Then, too, the increased payrolls and building work would mean better business for retailers and banks and other financial agencies. This activity would be started that eventually would benefit the entire community.

Second phase of the Danville Plan calls upon Danville Development Corporation to interest itself in assisting the new industries in their financing by establishing them on monthly operating statements, thus helping them to help themselves in obtaining credit. The training school for financial and budget control already mentioned is a part of this phase of the program.

STRESS CIVIC DEVELOPMENT

Third phase of the Plan is the development of Danville as a better city in which to live. Much has been done in the past few years along this line in improvement of streets, sewers and sanitation facilities. Much more can be done, directors of Danville Development Corporation believe, such as creating a boulevard system around Lake Vermilion, establishing a state park west of the city, and through further development and advertising of Danville's many natural resources and historical shrines.

Phase No. 4 of the Danville Plan provides a school for the retail field. Emphasis would be placed on training young executives on monthly budget operations and profit and loss statements in order to give retailers access to full facilities of banks.

Fifth and last phase of the Plan would be a campaign enlisting all organizations, through the churches, schools and other common meeting places, in a community-wide effort to eliminate prejudices among groups or classes detrimental to the general welfare and advancement of Danville on the road back to prosperity. Ultimate aim is a community working together for the common good.

Influential business men, sensing swing back into decentralized industry have encouraged smaller corporations to locate within its city limits and zoning areas. Due to abundant supply of fuel near at hand and good labor situation, Danville has in recent years attracted many smaller industrial organizations, such as Merle Sears Paper Box Co., Industrial Gloves Co., Howell Playground Equipment Co., and many others which have grown successful and created prosperity for Danville with consistent payrolls.

The industrial areas are within 5 to 12 minutes drive of residential and business sections. Danville is governed by Commission form of government. Fire and police departments are under civil service and there is unusually low bonded debt.

Danville traces ancestry and genealogy to native born stock. Only 5 per cent of the population foreign-born. City is proud of its sane, and sensible citizenry. Radicalism is conspicuous by its absence. Boasts high percentage of home owners and tax payers.

Danville is unusually sound financially. City was one of two in United States in which all banks opened day after banking moratorium.

Danville is the site of one of the most modern of the U. S. Veterans Administration Hospitals. Historic shrines intimately linked with the

Long Time Member D.H.I.A. Leads Association

By Don Swinford

John Schilling, long time dairyman, and member of Will County Dairy Herd Improvement Association, finishes his dairy career and membership in the Association by leading all other herds in average butter fat production.

Mr. Schilling's average production during the month was 1040 pounds of milk and 35.0 pounds of butter fat from 18 Registered Holsteins. He had one cow of the 18 dry. In terms of milk production this is over 9 cans from the 17 cows milking.

Mr. Schilling has belonged to the D. H. I. A. since 1930. He was first asked to join in Cook County, but refused because he wanted to belong to a Will County group. He did not join until later, and regrets very much that he did not go in the Cook County group. It was too late to know the value of his herd sire when of Mokena. This sire, Ostego, Hengveld Segis Osmby, had a daughter in production that was milking up to 50 and 60 lbs of milk and ran tests up to 4 percent. Mr. Schilling had several testers come to his place and each one would become enthused about the location of this sire to these good milkers. These inquiries were always halted by the statement "I sent him to the yards."

John's herd averaged 402 lbs. butterfat, 11912 lbs milk with 17 cows on test during the first year of testing. This herd average was torn down to 351.8 lbs butterfat, 10104 lbs milk when the daughters of a bull bought from the University of Illinois came into production. He purchased a bull from Hirsch Bros., in Mokena, also that was sent to the yards because his first daughter was poor in type, and did not seem to start out so good. He later found out that the daughter from this bull made his herd average jump up to 11636 lbs. milk and 420 lbs. butterfat.

John's herd has averaged from 9459 lbs. milk, 314.2 lbs. fat to 11636 lbs. milk, 420 lbs. fat. He says it is not to be thought, that a fellow will just keep climbing no matter what kind of a sire you select. It is much easier to go down in average production than it is to go up, when a herd reaches this level because this is two times the average production per cow in the State of Illinois. This is where D. H. I. A. plays an important part in selecting breeding stock and in knowing the value of sires before they are shipped to the yards.

To show the breeding and transmitting value of a sire it is clearly demonstrated with this Maltby bull. Two daughters of this sire made records over 400 lbs. butterfat from dams that made records of 300 and 302 lbs. This bull was mated to his daughters and this cross produced 538 lbs. and 645 lbs. butterfat. John has been one to realize dairymen as a business and found it interesting operating it on such a basis. He was always interested in type, production records, and pedigree, and is well read when it comes to Holstein pedigrees. He was very interested in seeing why a cow would produce as she did, and by looking up pedigrees found the reason. He broadened his knowledge of cattle by attending sales and going to see what other people had.

When I asked John what the value of D. H. I. A. was to him he said "Oh, that's the only thing, I've sold enough bull calves to pay my testing dues up until the last two years and could have sold more of them but I didn't think they were good enough. I have sold heifer calves to 4-H club boys and cows to dairymen because of records I've learned about feeding and conditioning cows and in fact I believe I have learned more about dairymen after I was 50 years old than I knew before."

I, as tester, believe I can speak as a representative of the Association as well as for myself, when I say that I sincerely regret to see this dairyman quit the business.

The four other high herds during the month of October were Art Mark, 13 P. B. and G. H. with an average production of 898 lbs. milk, 31.7 lbs. fat, with 0 dry cows. Joe Scott with 26 G. G. averaged 661 lbs. milk, 30.1 lbs. fat. This is with 3 dry cows. Louis Lauffer 14 P. B. H. cows averaged 814 lbs. milk and 29.1 lbs. fat, with one dry cow. Frank Sayers with 10 P. B. H. averaged 788 lbs. milk and 28.6 lbs. fat with none dry. The Association average for the month was 617 lbs. milk and 22.3 lbs. butter fat from 28 herds with 606 cows on test.

Oriental Theatre In Chicago Will Re-open Nov. 18

One of the most important events of the fall theatrical season is now taking place—the reopening of the Oriental theatre, Chicago, under new management, with a new stage, film, and price policy, and with one of Hollywood's biggest stars on the stage the first week.

The Oriental, one of the finest theatres in Chicago, with a capacity of 3,500 seats, reopens under the management of Jones, Linick and Schaefer (Friday, November 18) with the world's lowest prices for a deluxe picture palace.

Heading the stage show the first week will be none other than Freddie Bartholomew, star of such pictures as "Captain's Courageous", "Lord Jeff", and many others. His appearances at the Oriental will be the first time he has ever appeared on the stage in Chicago. He comes to this city during a brief vacation from film making in the nation's cinema capital.

The Oriental will feature latest film releases of all major companies on the screen, and elaborate presentation numbers on its stage. The orchestra will be under direction of Verne Buck.

The opening screen feature will be a new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture entitled "Vacation From Love", starring Dennis O'Keefe, Florence Rice, Reginald Owen, June Knights, and others.

Surrounding Freddie Bartholomew on the stage will be a brilliant vaudeville show.

The schedule prices will be the lowest in Chicago for a deluxe theatre featuring smash vaudeville and Hollywood big names. Prices will range from twenty-five cents to forty cents on week days except Saturdays. Saturdays the prices will go to fifty-five cents after 6:30 p. m. and on Sundays the top price will be fifty-five cents after 5 p. m.

Dark for many months, the opening of the Oriental under new management will be a gala event of real Hollywood proportions. Doors on the first day will open at 10 a. m.

Understanding and appreciation of the five basic freedoms guaranteed by the American Constitution and Bill of Rights are to be developed by a campaign of public education which will be sponsored throughout the country by the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States and its 3,700 affiliated units.

The 1938 1939 eight point program of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, adopted as a result of resolutions passed by the recent 39th annual V. F. W. encampment at Columbus, Ohio, includes "defense of our Constitutional rights of free speech, a free press, religious freedom, and rights of petition and assembly."

The V. F. W. is firmly convinced that a thorough understanding of America's five basic freedoms is this nation's strongest safeguard against Communism, Fascism, Nazism and other forms of government alien to the ideals of Americanism. "We speak glibly of 'Americanism' and 'democracy' but the average citizen is dangerously vague concerning the reasons why the American form of government must be preserved in the face of radical world changes in government, human rights and the determination of certain individuals and groups to dictate to nations, regardless of individual liberties and desires. The Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, by fostering public American interest in the privileges and responsibilities of our Constitutional form of government, believes we can reawaken our citizens to the dangers we face both from within and from without."

The perils of present day world conditions can be averted by the United States only if and when her citizens act to maintain their rightful individual liberties. We believe that understanding of the blessings of American democracy will lead to a greater appreciation of our form of government and a stronger defense against any dangers that threaten it."

Fitted and Lifted Waistline Is Smart

IF YOU want to have the very smart, tiny-waisted look, and to look slimmer than you are, by all means wear these two frocks, each with the high-at-the-middle line that emphasizes the slender, flattering silhouette. And if you want to wear really individual clothes, up-to-the-minute in fashion, of superior fabrics and becoming colors of your own selection, then make your own, with these very easy-to-follow designs.

Afternoon Dress.

Here's a lovely fashion that simply melts into your figure at the waistline, because the lifted midriff section is cut in one with the skirt panel in front. The bodice fits beautifully, thanks to scarcely perceptible gathers above the waistline, and darts on the shoulders. The sleeves fit the arm snugly, and are smartly high and Victorian at the shoulders. In velvet, satin, thin wool or silk crepe.

Workaday Dress.

An unusually smart casual fashion is this one with the princess skirt cut up to a high waistline and topped by gathers that give fullness over the bosom, accentuating the slimmest of the skirt. Swirls of braid on the pretty sleeves, and a row of braid edging the round collar trim it up just enough. Make this of gingham, calico or percale for home work, and in wool crepe, flannel or flat crepe for runabout.

The Patterns.

No. 1585 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. With long sleeves, size 38 requires 5 yards of 39-inch material. With short sleeves, 4 1/4 yards; 1 1/4 yards trimming.

No. 1629 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 4 3/4 yards of 35-inch material; 1 1/2 yards braid.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Britain Holds Fate of Jews In Holy Land

20th Century Holy War
Rocks the 'Cradle of Religion'

By JOSEPH W. LABINE

At its extremities the ancient land of Palestine is 160 miles long and 70 miles wide. That an area so small should have nurtured three of the world's greatest religions is an historical and geographic phenomenon.

Thus we know that almost a thousand years before Christ the Hebrew tribes of Palestine recognized a national god, the wrathful Jehovah. We know even better how the Christ child was born in Bethlehem several centuries later, marking the start of modern Christianity. Less familiar is the story of Mohammedism, which from an inauspicious start in the Holy Land has spread until it is now embraced by a tenth of the world's population.

But if this is phenomenal, it is even more shocking to realize that the cradle of religion, the traditional home of peaceful prophets and philosophers, is now in the midst of a modern "holy war" in which the ghosts of half-forgotten traditions have come home to roost.

Down through the centuries, Hebrews, Christians and Arabs found their freedom threatened and destroyed by successive waves of invaders. It is recalled that in 1100 B. C., upon their return from Egypt, the Israelites held sway over Palestine and retained that power almost unbroken until the Roman invasion of 63 B. C. Though Jews have since been dispersed throughout the world, they have not forgotten their "promised land" and the hope that some day they might return.

Britain the Liberator

Christianity came next and prospered temporarily despite the despotic Roman rule. Then, from Arabia to the south, came a new wave of religion known as Mohammedism. Its followers swept into Palestine, threw over the Roman regime and became masters of the Holy Land. But in the Seventh century even the Arabs were overcome by Ottoman Turks and until the World War Palestine remained under Turkish domination.

Today Palestine happens to be one of Great Britain's numerous problems. The modern background of this problem dates back to 1915 when the British were scurrying around for allies. To help defeat Turkey they enlisted Arabic support and in 1917 marched triumphantly into Jerusalem. In return Sir Henry MacMahon, British high commissioner for Egypt, had promised the sheriff of Mecca that Arabs would be given their independence.

But Great Britain forgot this promise under the pressure of war. Crafty Lord Balfour saw the value of Jewish monetary support. With Dr. Chaim Weizmann, leader of the Zionist movement, he won the British cabinet over to a plan whereby Palestine would be installed as a national home for Jews once the war was finished. The famous Balfour declaration of November, 1917, was followed by a League of Nations mandate giving Great Britain control over the Holy Land.

Arabs Cite Their Claim

But how about the Arabs? For 13 centuries their ancestors have tilled Palestine soil. They fought in the World War against Turkey under promise of freedom if the allies won. Since the war their national population of 325,000 has remained substantially unchanged, while a huge influx of persecuted Jews from European nations has swelled Hebrew population from 75,000 to 375,000.

Italy Looks to African Libya As 'Sponge' for Growing Race

ABOVE—A panoramic view of the new Tripoli. Modern avenues and highways have been unified and connect with traffic arteries that reach to other sections of the African continent.

TRIPOLI, LIBYA.—In the future, provided Italy's colonization program is carried out as planned, Africa and not the Western hemisphere will furnish homes and livelihood for Italy's growing population. By the end of this month 1,800 Italian families, totalling 20,000 individuals, will have arrived from their mother country across the Mediterranean to settle on farms prepared for them by the government. A few years hence, provided there is no set-back in plans for the complete colonization of Libya, this number may swell to the hundreds of thousands of land-owning farmers, populating Italy's overseas empire.

Libya, only a night's journey across the Mediterranean from Italian ports, is being developed with equal thoroughness. But because this North African colony already possesses the essential features of civilization, her work embraces a much broader program than that thus far applied to Ethiopia.

Since 1936 when a policy was originated which contemplated the rapid population of Libya with considerable numbers of peasants, vast areas of state lands have been converted. Soil has been tested and prepared for crops it will best produce. Public health and sanitation programs have been launched.

In addition to works which assist the agrarian colonization of Libya, Italy has taken into account the cultural development of her new colonies. The distinctly regional flavor of Libya's towns and cities has been preserved. The ancient mosques at Koufra, Murzuk, and Sidi Rafa, hitherto in danger of dissolution by time itself, have been preserved for future generations of Moslem worshipers and without any sacrifice of their intrinsic beauty.

Tripoli, with a population of 100,000, has been almost entirely altered within the past few years. Densely populated quarters such as the Garden City, the worker's district and the Cripple's Quarter have developed rapidly.

Libya's ancient ruins, too, are receiving the same careful attention as are her cities. Today the tourist can see marvelous buildings and mosaics built by the Romans at Lepis Magna, Sabratha, Cyrene Ptolemais and Apxollonis. The splendid Roman theater at Sabratha has been reconstructed and is now the scene of classical drama performed before audiences numbering into the thousands throughout the tourist season. At Cyrene the excavations have restored to scholars many documents and relics of the early Roman era.

A broken down telephone line with its steel pole bent over, between Nablus and Jenin, is evidence of the violence and sabotage featuring Palestine's Arab-Jewish warfare.

immigration and development must cease or Arabs will soon be in the minority, completely under Hebrew control.

Based on 20 years' experience since the World war, this fear may be well founded. Enthusiastic Jewry, happy over its long-sought national home, has invested countless thousands of dollars in the Holy Land, building modern cities like Tel Aviv which has mushroomed from 50,000 to 150,000 population since 1931.

Zionists Seek Farmers

Arabs might also base their fears on the Jew's native aggressiveness in commerce and industry. Even the Zionists themselves fear this trait, because they want Palestine Hebrews to become farmers, not city tradesmen. But they also count heavily on Jewish patronage from other nations in developing Palestine's world trade, which will consist largely of citrus exports.

If Great Britain could promise that her Jewish protectorate would not eventually control the Holy Land, Arabs might be partially pacified and might stop their policy of terrorism which has taken about 1,500 lives since July 5. But world events have given the Arabs strength during recent months. Since the treaty of Munich, where Great Britain capitulated to Jew-hating Germany and Italy, Arabs have carried on a ruthless campaign of warfare in which they receive the nodding assent of dictatorial nations. Moreover they are encouraged by—and envious of—the freedom granted Arabs in Egypt, Iraq and Syria. A mighty surge of nationalistic feeling now prevails throughout the Moslem world.

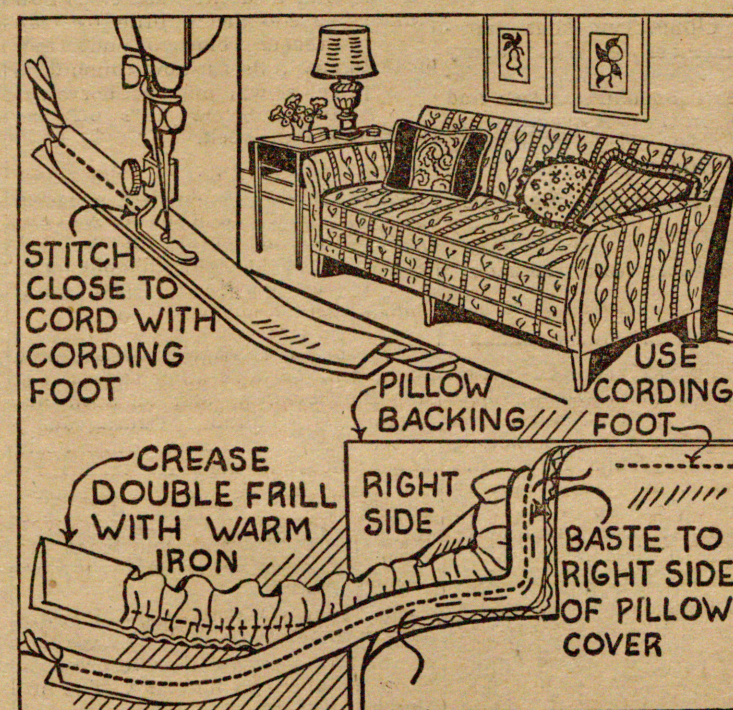

Britain has already limited Hebrew migration to 1,000 people a month in the face of wholesale Jewish expulsion from all central European countries. Within the past two years she has sent two investigating commissions to the Holy Land, both of them returning without a solution. Since the Munich treaty, Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain has been anxious to settle the Palestine problem, partially as appeasement for Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini.

Such an allegedly "weak-kneed" policy has heaped bitter American scorn on Prime Minister Chamberlain, not only from Jewish leaders but prominent statesmen and churchmen. Sorely pressed, British have retaliated that the United States is welcome to her Palestine mandate if she can do a better job with a hopeless problem.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Smart cushions from odds and ends.

THERE comes a letter from a reader ordering both of the sewing books offered below. She says, "I have to smile when people tell me it does not pay to sew. Recently I had a regular spree of doing over the living room. I spent $10.35 for materials. The sewing machine and I did the rest. Here is what the ten thirty-five bought. New slipcovers for the davenport and two chairs, chintz curtains for three windows, a new ottoman and a lamp shade. The slipcover for the davenport alone would have cost fifteen dollars if made outside."

It now seems that there is a need for more color in the newly decorated living room. The curtains are very gay but the new slipcovers rather neutral. Why not repeat some of the curtain colors with bright cushions? A clever girl I know saves the good parts of old silk dresses and blouses and buys remnants of bright silks and ribbons for this purpose. Her pillows are always most professional looking. If contrasting pieces are joined, she uses covered cords in the seams and contrasting cordings and neat little frills around the edges to repeat the strongest tones in the room. In this way many different kinds of material may be brought into harmony. I have sketched for you here some of the smart tricks that help to give cushions a well-tailored look.

NOTE: You also may have smart slipcovers, curtains and dozens of things you have been wanting. Mrs. Spears' books have Observers begin to doubt President Roosevelt's sagacity as a political strategist . . . The late Louis Howe seems to be missed . . . The President's blast against the Dies committee likely to have its effect on labor and political situations for some time to come.

WASHINGTON. — There are a good many observers who are beginning to suspect that President Roosevelt is not as shrewd a political strategist as he was a few years back. They blame this on two factors. By far the more important is the fact that the President no longer has his famous "No Man" in Louis McHenry Howe. But also important is the fact that Jim Farley is almost disregarded so far as broad strategy is concerned.

Howe's tremendous value to the President cannot be exaggerated. Right up to the time of his death he never hesitated to cross his beloved chief. He could say things to him which no one else would dare to mention. A virtual lifetime of devotion, so unselfish and self-effacing as to be classic, gave him this privilege. There is no doubt that he prevented Roosevelt from doing a great many things which would have been politically inexpedient. His wisdom was simply uncanny. His "feel" for a state situation was beyond belief. He was almost never fooled.

This does not mean that he always prevailed. For example he opposed to the utmost of his ability the trip Roosevelt made to the Pacific coast in the 1932 campaign. Howe knew that it was not necessary. He was against such a tremendous risk. He knew the possibility that Roosevelt, in a vigorous gesture, might actually fall down physically. This, Howe and most of Roosevelt's advisers, feared as one of the worst "breaks" that could happen against them.

Not that it would prove anything so far as Roosevelt's ability to be President was concerned, but they were terribly afraid of the possibility that the public might come to believe Roosevelt was physically unable, because of his infantile paralysis, to cope with the strain the presidency would impose.

But this failure to deter Roosevelt was the exception, not the rule. Normally Howe's advice would prevail, especially as it was generally reinforced by Mrs. Roosevelt's judgment, the First Lady having the most extraordinary respect for Howe's political judgment.

Howe Usually Was Right In His Political Moves

Observers are insisting that a "purge" would never have been attempted had Louis Howe been alive. This of course is pure supposition, but it is based on the knowledge on the part of men who knew Howe well that Howe never, in his whole life, approved a political move which turned out badly in the end. Incidentally it is common knowledge that Jim Farley did not approve the idea, but was unable to dissuade the President.

Conversation on this point of Roosevelt's political advice revived recently because of the President's intervention in the Pennsylvania situation, right after his blast at the Dies committee. In each case, observers believe, the President did neither himself nor his friends any political good.

As far as the Dies committee is concerned, about everything that could have been done to make that committee's work ineffective had already been done by experts. It was not necessary for the President, those holding this view contend, to attack the committee so ponderously, and thus awaken distrust on the part of a great many of his followers out in the country whose only doubt about the President himself is a suspicion that he is too friendly to the extremely radical elements.

In the Pennsylvania case the President, it is pointed out, actually intervened to help Charles Alvin Jones, against whom Judge Arthur H. James was running for governor. But the President's letter of protest did not mention Jones' name. On the contrary, it did mention the name of George H. Earle, with approval.

Military Preparedness To Proceed in Earnest

More military preparedness, protection against an evil day, is assured. Not only is the President for it, but congress is behind him on this. This means more war construction, airplanes and warships as well as military supplies, with cargo ships pretty nearly No. 1 on the entire list. The strategic hooking up of big power plants to guard against sabotaging efforts by foreign agents already is being studied—will be carried out.

Much heavier federal expenditures, further complicating the treasury's existing need for heavier taxes, are sure. So that the new tax bill, with a probable lowering of the present income exemption limits and boosting of the middle class rates, must be harsher than anticipated. There will be an intensive search for new sources of revenue. Strain of the federal treasury may be softened a little by transfer of present relief workers to private pay rolls as orders mount. But the relief will only be borrowing from Peter to pay Paul—the federal treasury will be footing the bill.

Financing overseas shipments, whether to neutrals or belligerents, will be one of the most vexing of all the many problems on the now obvious agenda. Recollection of the war debts never paid, and of the defaulted interest on foreign bonds, is keen, but there will be terrific pressure from business and labor to find some way of financing sales.

Emergency powers for the President in time of stress would seem to be in order. They would have been granted by congress without hesitation just a short time back. Now the whole thing is problematical. Senators who beat the purge are important. Distrust of the President's advisers, the Corcorans, and Cohens and Hopkins, has reached an all-time high in Capitol Hill. Short of actual war, the tendency of congress will be to keep a tight rein.

General Lack of Interest Shown in Recent Election

Campaign contributions proved the general lack of interest in the recent national election. Republican and anti-New Deal Democrats among business men apparently were willing to contribute to the campaigns of James J. Davis for reelection as senator in Pennsylvania, and of Judge Arthur H. James for governor of the Keystone state. They were willing to contribute to Robert A. Taft's campaign fund in Ohio for senator against Robert J. Bulkley, but became very parsimonious when asked to contribute to the national fund, to the considerable embarrassment of Republican National Chairman John D. M. Hamilton.

Effects of the blast President Roosevelt launched against the Dies committee will ramify and continue to affect both political and labor situations for the next two years. In fact it is almost impossible to exaggerate the consequences.

The President, in effect, made the sit-down strike, and Gov. Frank Murphy's handling of it, the paramount issue in the recent gubernatorial campaign. So far as most of the rest of the country was concerned the whole point in Michigan was whether its voters approved the sit-down strike.

This was true despite the President's careful phraseology in his blast at the Dies committee; for example his denial that at any time Murphy had expressed "condonation" of such strikes, or "any illegal practice."

Those last quoted words stirred a lot of conversation in Washington. The point was, especially in view of the fact that the statement was carefully written out before being given to the newspapers, whether the President meant to imply that sit-down strikes were not "illegal," or whether he merely wished to avoid that discussion. It will be recalled that when the activities of Governor Murphy on the sit-down strikes were front page news, Frances Perkins, Roosevelt's secretary of labor, commented that such strikes had not been "proven unconstitutional."

Caused Garner's First Break With President

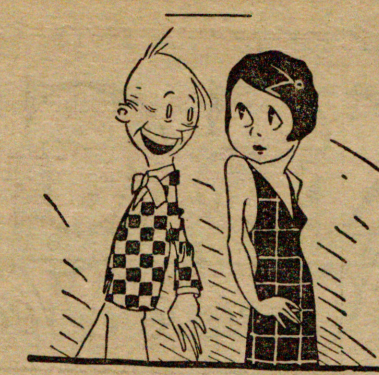

It will also be recalled that it was over the sit-down strikes in which Murphy figured that the first serious break between the President and Vice President John Nance Garner occurred. Garner's sharp criticisms to friends on Capitol Hill over the White House attitude about this resulted in a rallying to the Texan which has since made him one of the outstanding conservative candidates for the White House.

Yet the best information obtainable is that the President did not issue his blast for the purpose of making the Michigan electorate a political barometer on the sit-down strike. He did it simply and solely because he thought it the most effective way in which he could extend help to Murphy in his campaign, and yet avoid doing a lot of things he did not want to do, some of which would have been decidedly embarrassing.

For months the President had been under terrific pressure to go to this and that state to aid sorely harried Democratic nominees. One state in particular, which it would have been most embarrassing for him to visit, is Wisconsin. To have made a trip to Michigan for a speech in behalf of Murphy, which is what the Murphy management wanted, would have been apparently to ignore deliberately the plight of hard-pressed Democratic Sen. F. Ryan Duffy, whom the La Follette were trying to polish off. Duffy has been a 100 per cent New Dealer, but Roosevelt is not anxious to antagonize the La Follettes. Hence the Dies committee blast.

C. Houston Goudiss Describes the Body's Vital Need for Vitamin C; Names Most Significant Sources of This Substance

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

OF ALL the vitamins that should be included in the diet every day, none, perhaps, is more important, nor more frequently provided inadequately, than vitamin C.

There are, I believe, two reasons for this. First, unlike some of the other vitamins, vitamin C is not stored by the body, so that it is impossible to build up a reserve supply. In order to maintain top health, it therefore must be furnished in the diet every day. Second, the C vitamin is more easily destroyed than some of the others, for it is oxidized upon exposure to the air, and is usually partially destroyed in cooking. That accounts for the well-known rule that it is usually desirable to include in the daily diet some raw foods, such as cabbage, or citrus fruits. The rule may be waived, however, when tomato juice or cranberry sauce are included in the menu. For careful experiments have determined that, because of their high acid content, these two foods retain their vitamin C to a remarkable degree, when commercially canned or when cooked quickly in the home.

Functions of Vitamin C
The full importance of including an adequate supply of vitamin C-rich foods in the diet can only be fully appreciated when the amazing functions of this anti-scurvitic vitamin are fully understood.

Long years before the first vitamin had been discovered, and when the science of nutrition was still in its infancy, English physicians observed that the use of orange juice would help to cure children of a serious disease characterized by a sallow, pale complexion, flabby muscles, and a painful inflammation of the membrane surrounding the bones of the legs.

And as early as 1795 it was also discovered that British sailors could be prevented from developing the painful and serious disease of scurvy if they were given a regular ration of lemon juice which had been evaporated to a syrup. It was because lemon, then called lime, juice was invariably prescribed for the navy that British sailors came to be known as "limies," a term which is still in use today.

Scurvy a Controllable Disease
Scurvy was thus prevented or cured in both children and adults, long before scientists learned that precious vitamin C is the controlling factor.

Horse Sense About Winter Oil Change

Cold weather creates new problems in lubrication. To overcome damaging wear, the motor oil must possess three essential characteristics: (1) low cold test to assure quick easy starts (2) ability to lubricate at all driving speeds (3) durability to stand up for reasonable mileage. Curiously enough these requirements are contradictory in that to assure one factor it is very easy to unbalance another.

The only safe rule to follow in preparing your car for winter is to buy the very best motor oil, Acid-Free Quaker State.

The refiners of Quaker State were pioneers in developing motor oils for winter use. Today in four great modern refineries the most modern equipment and methods transform the finest Pennsylvania grade crude into motor oils which make automobiles, trucks and tractors run better, last longer, the year 'round.

The low cold test of Quaker State Winter Oil assures smooth easy starts. Its purity frees you of worry about sludge, carbon and corrosion. Its ability to stand up is unequalled . . . you go farther before you need to add a quart.

It is merely commonsense to practice economy. And the accumulated experience of car manufacturers, engineers, and most car owners proves that the use of high quality motor oil is genuine economy. It is conservatively estimated by authorities that 80 to 90 per cent of all repairs to an automobile are caused by faulty or incorrect lubrication.

A wise man once said: "It takes 12 months and sometimes longer to correct a mistake on a farm." Just so, five minutes running with the wrong oil in the engine of your car the first cold morning this winter can cause more wear and damage than all the miles you drove this past summer.

Play safe with your motor investment. Ask your dealer to prepare your car for winter with Acid-Free Quaker State Winter Oil of the proper grade for your community.—Adv.

ling factor in this disease. And shortly after the turn of the century a systematic study was begun by scientists in both Europe and America to discover all the foods that possessed the almost magical power to prevent and cure this former scourge of mankind.

In the course of many painstaking investigations and brilliant discoveries, we have gradually increased our knowledge of scurvy until today we know that the substance which prevents the disease is vitamin C.

May Retard Growth in Children
It has also been noted that many cases of latent scurvy can be found among children and adults in all walks of life. It has been determined, for example, that many children who are restless, irritable, or retarded in growth are in reality suffering from a deficiency of vitamin C.

When deprived of this vitamin, experimental animals develop swollen, tender joints, sore jaws and spongy, bleeding gums, while the teeth become loosened and assume irregular positions. Hemorrhages may occur almost anywhere in the body, due to capillary weakness, and are particularly common in the kidneys, intestines, bone marrow, under the skin, in the muscles and adrenal glands. Indeed, one of the most interesting of all the discoveries concerning vitamin C was made with guinea pigs. It was observed that in a healthy animal, the adrenal glands are rich in vitamin C, while in a scorbutic animal, they contain practically none.

Pyorrhea and Vitamin C
Many investigators have discovered that a deficiency of vitamin C causes profound changes, not only in the gums, but also in the enamel and dentine of the teeth. It has been suggested that pyorrhea may be associated directly with a vitamin C deficiency. Certainly, there is enough convincing evidence, as a result of work with both children and adults, to indicate the importance of an adequate supply of vitamin C in maintaining healthy teeth.

Sources of This Body Regulator
Vitamin C is produced by plants during their growth. It is found in juicy stems, bulbs, roots, tubers and fruits.

Outstanding among the fruits are the citrus family, including oranges, lemons and grapefruit; tomatoes and cranberries. Raw cabbage is a good source as is watercress.

So important is vitamin C that one or more generous portions of a vitamin C-rich food should be consumed daily, preferably at every meal.

Orange and tomato juice have been used interchangeably for quite some time as a convenient and easily available source of vitamin C. In recent years, some experiments performed at a leading university have given a high ranking to cranberries on this score, so that they, too, may be

AROUND THE HOUSE

Watch Young Toes.—It's dangerous, especially for children, to have the feet of stockings too short; it may lead to foot deformities. Stockings should not be too large, either; they may form ridges that will cause painful blisters.

Stained Tea Cloths.—Cover stains on a tea cloth with glycerin and leave to dry; then boil and rinse in the usual way and all the marks will disappear.

Choosing Poultry.—When you choose poultry see that the beak and claws of a fowl are soft, not stiff and horny. The bones of all young birds are soft.

Cleaning Hair Brushes.—Hair brushes should be washed in hot water to which a nut of soda or a few drops of ammonia have been added. Dip the bristles in and out, but do not allow the water to cover the backs. Rinse in cold water and wipe the backs, but not the bristles.

How to Stretch Soap.—To make your laundry soap last longer, unwrap it as soon as you buy it and pile the cakes loosely in a dry place so they'll dry. Hard soap goes farther than soft.

ranked as a significant source of vitamin C.

These brilliant little red berries come into market in the fall—the very time when it is important to eat generously of fruits to fortify the body against fall and winter ills. Their tart flavor helps to stimulate appetite and their fruit acids promote intestinal tone.

Neither the maturity nor variety of the fruit appears to have any influence on the vitamin content, and even when cooked, as whole fruit sauce, they retain from 75 to 80 per cent of the original vitamin C content of the fruit. Cranberries are also a fair source of vitamin A which is not impaired by cooking, and they contain iodine, iron, copper and manganese.

Because they are such a versatile fruit, cranberries can be utilized throughout the menu and at any meal. Thus orange and tomato juice may be varied at breakfast by serving a cranberry conserve, jelly or sauce, or a cranberry juice cocktail. For lunch or dinner, this same fruit may be served as an appetizer; with the meat course; or used to make a variety of attractive desserts.

If vitamin C-containing foods are included generously in the daily diet, the homemaker may well feel that she has provided her family with an important form of health insurance.

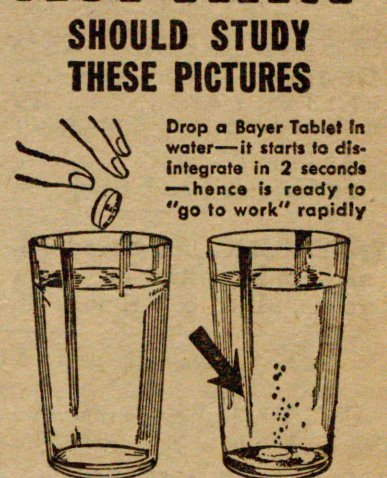

Questions Answered

A. F. G. Jr.—Green salads do play several important roles in the diet. They furnish bulk or cellulose, minerals, vitamins and water, and therefore help to balance a meal.

Mrs. F. C. L.—Most authorities now advise giving semi-solid foods to infants before the end of the first year. Usually the cereals, vegetables, and fruit pulps are carefully strained so that they are finely divided and free from harsh particles which would irritate a baby's delicate digestive tract.
